

THE REAL RUSSIA

The signing of the German treaty and Spain's reapproachment signifies that the Russians have already conquered Western Europe, that Europe prefers to be a province in the Russian Empire, sharing in an ascending historical movement than continue to be, as Yockey said in the PROCLAMATION OF LONDON: "... a backward population waiting for re-education by the American world-clown and the sadistic Jew, a beggar-colony watching for crumbs from the table of rich America, a loan market for the New York financier, creeping before American tourists." To side with America today is to ally oneself with death. It is to follow the Jew down his hysterical path to new and better Auschwitzes. History has finally caught up with the Anglo-Yiddish swindlers. Shopkeepers and intellectuals don't count in the world of struggle. The sword IS mightier than the pen, you see; and in the scale of history blood weighs more than gold.

The Russification of Europe was an event that was foreseen by many penetrating thinkers. Their words of course went unheeded. The bourgeoisie preferred the opaque visions of Jewish intellectuals. Chateaubriand realized the significance of Russia and longed to visit it because "she threatened to overwhelm the world." Custine visited Russia in 1839 and wrote "they wish to rule the world by conquest." DeTocqueville equated Europe with the disunited Greece that was conquered by Philip of Macedonia. Indeed, this is a stunning historical parallel; almost perfect. The Macedonians were barbarians with a veneer of Greek culture, Russians are barbarians with a veneer of European culture. Under the leadership of Philip's son, Alexander the Great, the Macedonians and Greeks overthrew the giant Persian Empire, soft, luxurious and decadent. Are we Persia?

The dream of a Russo-German alliance was also Lenin's. Although couched in Marxist jargon, it revealed, nevertheless that the embers of Russian Pan-Slavism were still alive despite the Jewish revolution:

"To unite the proletariat of industrial Germany, Austria and Czechoslovakia with the proletariat of Russia, and thereby create a mighty agrarian and industrial combination from Vladivostok to the Rhein, from the Finnish Gulf to the blue waters of the Danube, capable of feeding itself and confronting the reactionary capitalism of Britain with a revolutionary giant, which with one hand would disturb the tranquility of the east and with the other beat back the pirate capitalism of Anglo-Saxon countries."

Such statements might have caused Lenin's death. It is not generally known, that he was shot by the Jewess Kaplan with a poison bullet, and died several months later.

As early as the middle 1920's the German Army headed by von Seeckt concluded a pact in which permission was granted to train in Russia in order to circumvent the Versailles Treaty.

Perhaps the most amazing prophecy of all was uttered by the great Spanish political writer Donoso Cortes in 1850:

"When nothing is left in the West but two camps, that of the despoilers and that of the dispoiled — then, gentlemen, the hour of Russia in the clock of time will have struck. Then Russia will be able to march peacefully, arms shouldered, into our lands; then, also, gentlemen, the world will witness the greatest chastisement in world history — the chastisement of England. Her ships will be useless against the colossal empire which grips Europe with one hand and India with the other."

Substitute America for England and you have an accurate description of the political situation as it exists today.

On February 21, 1943 General-Count Jordana, the Spanish Foreign Minister, tried to make the Anglo-Saxon powers realize the folly of their war policies.

"If events develop in the future as they have done up to now, it would be Russia which will penetrate deeply into German territory. And we ask the question: if this should occur, which is the greater danger not only for the continent but for England herself, a Germany not totally defeated and with sufficient strength to serve as a rampart against Communism, a Germany hated by all her neighbors, which would deprive her of authority though she remained intact, or a Sovietized

Germany which would certainly furnish Russia with the added strength of her war preparations, her engineers, her specialized workmen and technicians, which would enable Russia to extend herself with an empire without precedent from the Atlantic to the Pacific? ..."

The British ambassador Sir Samuel Hoare answered as follows:

"The Minister says that the great danger to Europe is Communism and that a Russian victory will make all Europe Communist ... The British view is very different ... will any single country be able to dominate Europe at the end of this war? Russia, at least, will need a long period of reconstruction and recovery in which she will depend greatly upon the British Empire and the United States of America for economic help. ..."

Here we see the fatuous hope around which all Allied war plans revolved. They reckoned that Russia would have to bring in foreign capital to reconstruct her war-shattered country. They were mesmerized by the vision of the enormous profits to be had from such an undertaking. Thus, they were willing to allow Russia a free hand in Eastern Europe in exchange for "trade" and "economic agreements."

On the contrary, it was a method of constructing markets for capitalism, markets subsidized by the American taxpayer. It led to the domination of Europe by American corporate-liberalism working hand in hand with blood-spotted Zionism. This has sown a harvest of hatred that we are just beginning to reap. Stalin had no intention of turning over his country to American corporations. As Russia was simply too decimated by the war to fight, he slammed down his "Iron Curtain" and began to reconstruct with his usual draconian methods. Once again, Stalin put one over on the Jews and the international financiers. All the Lend-Lease money they had invested in the Russian war effort went down the drain. This is what precipitated the "Cold War," not the fear of Russian expansion.

Almost overnight, militant Wall Street leftists metamorphosized into "anti-Communists." Joe McCarthy wasn't put out of commission because he thought he might find some secret agent of Stalin in the State Department, but because he was getting close to the scent which linked all the Jewish Communists — the Dexter Whites, the Rosenbergs and Company — with the high and mighty American capitalist establishment.

In his penetrating introduction to IMPERIUM, Willis Carto makes the point that the essential components of American foreign policy — and this holds true of all American policies whatsoever — are "enlightened greed and naive do-good stupidity," in other words, money and ideals. This combination is the bedrock of all bourgeoisie ideology, of marxism no less than capitalism. It is the world-view of the Nineteenth Century, the view that history is determined by philosophical "truths" and economic systems; that man was somehow progressing upwards and that material goods and drooling, humanistic ideals were the propellents of this progress.

Democracy was the dispensation under which this glorious upward thrust was to be fully realized. Man was to be free — a god he seemed to the panegyrists of equality, a beautiful, good and noble creature who, if but allowed to pursue happiness would grow in wisdom until he achieved utopia.

The pursuit of happiness has now ended — on a psychiatrist's couch, in a strait jacket on an LSD trip, or beaten to death by rioting savages. Progress has been revealed as a downward plunge into the abyss. Progress is a hypodermic needle, the drug that keeps the silent majority silent and man is not good or noble nor wise. He is the same old ludicrous combination of saint and sinner that the reactionaries have always said he was. History is hardly ever an upward spiral towards some never never land of peace and plenty.

Like all life it is cyclic; the ever recurring drama of war and peace, life and death, rulers and ruled, equals and unequals, victors and vanquished. It is, on its highest level, a struggle to maintain that fragile growth called culture, and on its lowest, the venting of the urge to crawl back into the prehistoric slime.

Right now America is trying its damndest to crawl back. It is infatuated with filth and vice. It loves its enemies and hates its friends. If there is a man who would fain pull America up from the dirt and wipe her clean, who would remind her of her heritage, and race, her destiny, who would dare to save her, she vilifies, persecutes and crucifies him. America has a death-wish. It yearns for the tomb and longs to feel the maggots tunneling in its vitals. Decadent America howls for birth control and abortion — a deep-seated psychological admission that they wish they were never born, that they hate and reject life itself. The coffin has triumphed over the cradle!

In place of the glad assumption of duties, there is the whine for rights. A morgue and a mad house is America, a funeral march to the thump of rock and roll. America lays down the burden of destiny and accepts oblivion. She will now feel the lash of the conqueror. In the words of Custine:

"When our cosmopolitan democracy, bearing its last fruits, shall have made of war a thing odious to whole populations, when the nations calling themselves the most civilized on earth shall have finished enervating themselves in their political debaucheries ... the floodgates of the North will open on us once again, then we shall undergo a last invasion not of ignorant barbarians but of cunning and enlightened masters, more enlightened than ourselves, for they will have learned from our own excesses how we can and must be governed. It is not for nothing that Providence piles up so many inactive forces in the east of Europe. One day the sleeping giant will arise and force will put an end to the reign of words."

I, for one, have always felt that there was some invisible mystic link binding together the high cultures of the white race; that when one faltered another rose up to carry on. Egypt gave way to Greece: Greece to Rome: and Rome to the barbarian tribes who were our ancestors. Is the West—now dying—destined to pass on the torch to the Slav?

Draw whatever consolation you can from this, dear reader: for if we must have a tyrant, a million times better the Russians than the thing which rules us now. Better even a quick death in a nuclear holocaust than the slow, mouldering and withering into the Jewish hell of mongrelization and nihilism. Better anything than a system which gives us no ideal worth living for and no faith worth dying for.

These were my thoughts as I stood before the great stone column in the ancient port of Barcelona.
